

As a flight attendant for a major airline, I implore the FCC to continue the ban on cellphone use in flight. We, flight attendants, have a hard enough time getting passengers to turn off the phone for push back, let alone if they were allowed to talk during flight and there was an emergency. Also, we receive numerous complaints about loud voices when passengers are talking amongst themselves and also when they have a DVD player/computer with volume on, no headsets. For most people a plane is a quiet haven that the majority of us would like to keep that way. The most important reason for not allowing cell phone use, is that certain passengers may use it for unlawful activities. The crews have enough other issues without having to police phone conversations for encrypted messages. For the safety of the flying public and crews, please do not allow cell phones to be used during flight.

Jordan Hopcus